Humanism is an ethical philosophy that derives its principles from science and reason rather than theology. It asserts the worth and dignity of every person, advocates personal liberty tempered by social and environmental responsibility, and promotes democracy, compassion, and justice. It sees human beings as natural organisms, whose values arise from culture and experience, and holds humanity responsible for its own affairs.

President's Message for February 2013

by Zelda Leah Gatuskin

The February 12 anniversary of Charles Darwin's birth provides opportunity to consider the importance of Art to human civilization. Yes, we will celebrate Darwin's rigorous investigative method and how his theory of evolution by natural selection has contributed to our knowledge in every branch of Science. But, I ask you: How widely would Darwin's research and theory be understood without the Art - without the many detailed drawings of the fossils he collected and the illustrations commissioned by him and his collaborating authors for The Zoology of the Voyage of H.M.S. Beagle?

The Zoology was edited by Darwin and included five parts, each authored by an expert in a particular field: Richard Owen for Fossil Mammalia, George Robert Waterhouse for Mammalia, John Gould for Birds, Leonard Jenyns for Fish and Thomas Bell for Reptiles. While Darwin and his colleagues came out of a tradition of naturalist-artists, among the authors of The Zoology, only John Gould made his own drawings and paintings. And who made all of those other extraordinary illustrations?

I have been pouring over the Darwin Online website, where virtually every page of every Darwin notebook, manuscript and published work has been scanned and cataloged, and there is little credit given to the artists and lithographers who portrayed the physical evidence of Darwin's claim. In some cases, their names appear on the plates, along with those of printers and publishers. The 32 plates in Part I of The Zoology are inscribed with, "G. Scharf del et lithog [drawing and lithography]." But Scharf is not credited on the title page of the volume or even with the List of Plates.

Now consider the descriptive text by Richard Owen for the Toxodon Platensis of Plate I and how helpful it would be to have Scharf's drawing at hand. "...The general form of the skull, as seen from above, is pyriform; but viewed sideways, and without the lower jaw, it is semi-ovate; it is depressed, elongate, of considerable breadth, including the span of the zygomatic arches, but becoming rather suddenly contracted anterior to them, the facial part thence growing narrower to near the muzzle, which again slightly expands..." And it goes on.

It seems to me that we owe some acknowledgment to those who documented the fossil record and the living record and conveyed graphically the fundamentals of evolution before the age of digital technology. So far, my search has yielded little about them. The lithographers named were often working from the sketches made by other artists. At least G. Scharf, being both artist and lithographer, lives on alongside Darwin's legacy. But what I read of his career saddened me:

"George Johann Scharf (1788–1860) was a water color painter, draughtsman and lithographer...He exhibited his paintings at the Royal Academy from 1817 to 1850, and was a member of the New Society of Painters in Water Colours. His drawings brought him into contact with Charles Darwin, who commissioned Scharf for a series of illustrations of fossil bones from South America. But the two men had a falling out, for Darwin felt that Scharf's price was too high and that he was being "ripped off." After this event, Scharf's future commissions with scientific institutions began to dry up, and in his last years, Scharf struggled to sell his work." (Wikipedia)

I looked in vain for any decent drawing made by Darwin. He may have been an intellectual giant, but he needed his illustrators. Their visual record remains direct and universal, preserving the essence of his research and his times. In many ways, those drawings have drawn him for us, showing us the world through his eyes as he sought out significant details in organic forms. It is here, in the passionate, probing observation of nature that Science and Art overlap.

A Darwin Day for Albuquerque?

Yes, if HSNM has anything to do with it! We are submitting a request to Mayor Berry to proclaim February 12, 2013 as Darwin Day in Albuquerque, and we're helping him out by providing the suggested wording below. If you would like to help HSNM promote Darwin Day, please contact Jerry Gilbert right away: drjgilbert@aol.com, (505) 400-9649.

Proposed Darwin Day Proclamation

WHEREAS: Charles Darwin was the first to propose the scientific theory of evolution by natural selection, with the result that most of what we understand about the diversity of life and the process by which it has adapted and changed has originated in his insights; and

WHEREAS: Charles Darwin recognized the importance of scientific discovery and, as a naturalist on board the HMS Beagle, demonstrated the scientific method with his important observations about the geological and zoological diversity of the lands he visited; and

WHEREAS: February 12 is the anniversary of Darwin's birth in 1809.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that I, RICHARD J. BERRY, Mayor of the City of Albuquerque, do hereby declare 12 February, 2013, to be 'DARWIN DAY' in Albuquerque, and

* RECOGNIZE the enormous benefits that science contributes to the advancement of humanity and,

* AFFIRM the importance of preserving scientific discovery and human curiosity as bedrocks of American society, and * ENCOURAGE all citizens to celebrate the life and discoveries of Charles Darwin and to commemorate this day with appropriate events and activities.

The Albuquerque Council for International Visitors (ACIV) is an all volunteer non profit organization that works under the auspices of the U S State Department. This particular project is called "TOLERANCE AND INTERFAITH DIALOGUE IN THE U.S. (ENGLISH/FRENCH), A Regional Project for Africa. From their prospectus:

"This project will provide an overview of religious freedom and tolerance amid diverse populations in the U.S. as well as the role of religious and faith-based organizations in various arenas, including community service, education, and electoral politics. The participants will also have the opportunity to learn about the role of faith in American secular society and interfaith programs that contribute to social cohesion. The project is designed for clergy, educators, and lay leaders of national or local religious groups of all faiths."

The group will be visiting with local religious groups over the course of their visit and specifically requested to meet with a nonreligious group. With 15 visitors, we will be asking members to RSVP and help with extra chairs and refreshments as needed.

Patrons and Trials

by Jean O'Hara

Fathers have to patronize many things
Like children, ideas and writing books.
Yes, directions for everything which brings
The human in contact with those human looks.
We see what we want when we examine
The life worth living that evaporates
As soon as deathdom comes to undermine
Our aspirations and leaves no room for mates.
If we can't live beyond the grave, then save
The wife left behind when a brave man dies.
Because the disease or killers do beckon their knave
And don't love, just sit for geld, that makes them
despise
A philosopher, a doctor or husband.
Lights out, Martin Luther King, you're now sand.

This War is Hell(arious)

"Yes, the long war on Christianity. I pray that one day we may live in an America where Christians can worship freely! In broad daylight! Openly wearing the symbols of their religion... perhaps around their necks? And maybe --- dare I dream it? --- maybe one day there can be an openly Christian President. Or, perhaps, 43 of them, consecutively."
